The Day's News —and The Century

When you read your morning paper do you not find an allusion which you do not fully comprehend? There is war in Persia. Where is that town at which the battle was fought? A picture is stolen from the Louvre. Who painted it and what is its history? The President's message alludes to the decision in the American Tobacco Company's case. What is that decision? You speak glibly of "radium." What is "radium"? Can you define it? You are speaking of your new suit. Do you say the "sit" or the "set" of the suit?

Do not think of The Century as a set of books to round out your library. Think of it as a daily help in reading your newspaper, in following your vocation, in enjoying your hobby, or sport, or recreation.

The Century is our greatest work of reference because it can be used by you in more ways than any other kind of cyclopedia. The information it contains is not only the latest and most accurate, but it is the most accessible.

When The Century was planned overtwenty years ago it was based on an idea that had never been tried- the idea of putting into one work all the kinds of books of reference that had been found necessary to the intelligent man, and arranging these on a system by which every fact contained in its volumes could be found instantly. That is why it is something more than a cyclopedia, just as it is something more than a dictionary and something more than an atlas. It is a cyclopedia arranged on a dictionary plan; it is a dictionary arranged on a cyclopedia plan; it is an atlas arranged on the plan of both. It is the last word of the most eminent authority on each of the subjects which it covers, and it covers every subject known to art, science, literature and history that can be expressed in printed words.

All this has been gathered together, carefully edited, intelligently condensed, copiously illustrated and permanently bound so that it is at once a set of books of which any library may be proud and a necessary assistant to both the practical man and the special student.

respecting, ambitious man. It is a purchase which is justified by every reason of forethought and self help.

The new and enlarged edition of The Century Dictionary, Cyclopedia and Atlas has required nearly one-third new matter to bring t up to date. In the twenty years since its first publication this world has developed so rapidly, so many discoveries, inventions, explorations and investigations have gone torward, that the sum of the world's knowledge has increased one-third. This is the real world. While you live, work and have your being in it you need this knowledge to help you to understand it better. Education is largely the understanding of such things as The Century explain
